A fox once saw a crow fly off with a piece of cheese in its beak. The crow went and sat on a branch of a tree. The fox's mouth watered. 'I want that cheese,' he thought.

He walked up to the tree. 'Good day, Mistress Crow,' he cried. 'You look so pretty today. How bright are your eyes! You sing better than all the other birds. Your song is sweeter than the cuckoo's song. You are the Queen of Birds. Please sing me a song too.'

The crow was very pleased. She loved the fox's lies. She lifted up her head and began to caw loudly. But the moment she opened her mouth, the cheese fell to the ground. The fox quickly picked it up.
